What is a Co-Production?

A co-production is a joint venture between two or more different production companies for the purpose of producing a feature film, television/web show or series and so on. In the case of an international co-production, production companies from different countries (typically two to three) work together for producing content across different media platforms.

Who is a Co-Producer?

The producer of a film carries out several tasks like raising finance, securing talent, engaging crew, preparing budgets, sourcing locations, arranging post-production and other such activities that cover the film's journey from script to screen. There are times when it makes sense to pool resources with another producer, splitting these responsibilities in accordance with their respective expertise and resources. Where more than one producer makes a film as a collective effort in this way, it is known as a co-production and the producers are known as co-producers.

The co-producers from different countries will enter into a co-production agreement that will set out their respective rights and obligations together with their financial interest in the film. Creative control is shared between the co-producers and there is a mix of local and foreign professionals in creative positions.

Benefits of International Co-Productions

Co-productions are an increasingly attractive option for many producers. There are many potential benefits of official co-productions, including the sharing of creative and technical resources.

- Ability to pool financial resources and share the associated financial risk
- Access to the partner government's incentives and subsidies
- Access to the partner's market and hence newer audiences and an opportunity to build a footprint for national cinema
- Access to a particular project initiated by the partner
- Access to a desired location; or to cheaper inputs
- Cultural benefits and the opportunity to learn from the partner
- Increase in the quality of production as there is access to specialized skills, a broader range of talent and equipment
- Job creation for all countries involved

What is a Co-Production Treaty?

In the international industry, the term "Co-production" is generally used to refer specifically to a film that is made under the umbrella of a particular governmental Co-production treaty. It is now possible for filmmakers of different countries to come together and make films under bilateral co-production agreements.

Governmental co-production treaties outline what each producer is required to bring to the table. In addition to specifying how large a percentage a nation must invest in a production's budget, they determine how much of the budget is spent in each territory that's part of the deal. Therefore, the amount of funding a country puts into a film generally returns in the form of local spending, which boosts the local industry.

Similarly, cast and crew are also permitted to enter either country subject to the fact that they comply with the relevant country's legislation relating to entry, residence and employment. To obtain Co-production status, films must comply with the Co-production Agreement (the "Treaty") between the partnering countries. Filmmakers must apply to the relevant competent authorities in both the countries for the official co-production status.

Key Takeaways of an international Co-production

(Assuming that one of the co-producers is from India and the other from abroad)

A work shall be jointly produced by producers of two countries and a third-country producer may also participate.

It is generally agreed between the co-producers that their respective financial contributions shall be utilized towards the cost of production of the film. A detailed Finance Plan is then made out, showing the financial contributions made by each co-producer and thus signifying their rights in the exploitation of the film.

It is normally agreed between the co-producers that they shall be the joint owners of all the rights in the film in perpetuity, as per the ratio of their financial investments/contributions towards the production of the film.

For the purposes of the calculation of IPR, equity holding, Net Profits etc., the co-producers may agree at a fixed exchange rate, for conversion of Dollar/Euro into Indian Rupee.

Both co-producers shall consult with each other prior to entering into agreements with any additional co-producers or financiers, as the case may be.

All principal decisions concerning the production of the film are made jointly by the co-producers in good faith, provided that in the event of a deadlock, the decision of the majority producer normally prevails.

All rights of the film, whether now known or in the future created, shall be owned by the respective co-producers, to the extent of their financial contribution, unless otherwise agreed by the Parties in writing. These rights will be held in perpetuity and in the territory of the entire world. The copyrights and revenue share between the producers will therefore be proportional to their contribution.

Both co-producers shall also own the derivative rights of the films i.e. rights towards production of any remake, prequel, sequel, and spin-off.

Any distributor or sales agent appointed in the domestic or international market is normally done by one of the co-producers, who may also be appointed as the Delegate Producer, subject to consent provided by the other co-producer.

The format and/or the manner in which the credits would appear in the final copy of the film would be set out by the co-producers in their Agreement. In the event an individual distributor or any third party acquires the film to distribute either for the entire Indian territory and/or overseas territory, it may require the first "presentation" credit. In such case, the co-producers may agree to receive an "In Association with" credit. It is agreed that all other additional co-producers shall be entitled to credit as "Co-Producers" as may be agreed upon between the Parties and such additional co-producers in respect of the film.

Any award for 'Best Film' shall go to the credit of the co-producers jointly along with the other additional co-producers. It may also be agreed that the prize monies and awards received anywhere in the world, may accrue only to individual artistes/ technicians/director, wherever applicable and that 100% of producers' share of prize monies is due to all producers/co-producer and these monies will be divided pari-passu.

The film shall incorporate the animated logos, still logos and credits as agreed by the co-producers and set forth in the co-production agreement. Any deviation from the credits, are as per mutually agreed terms.

The film will further have all such credits as the financing and other agreements/obligations may require.

The co-producers normally agree that they shall be jointly responsible for the creative of the film's advertising, marketing, official press releases and publicity worldwide, including that for any film festival. The sharing of expenses shall be as mutually decided by the co-producers.

Each Party shall, at its own expense, indemnify, save, and hold harmless the other Party and its successors, licensees, assigns, agents, representatives, and affiliates from and against any and all claims, demands, causes of action, obligations, liability, loss, damage, costs, and expenses (including reasonable attorneys' fees), incurred or sustained by reason of or arising out of any breach or alleged breach of any of the warranties, representations, obligations, or agreements herein made by such defaulting Party, or from any reliance upon any such warranties, representations, obligations, or agreements.

Salient Features of International Audio Visual Co-Production Agreements signed by India and Various Countries

India has co-production treaties with Bangladesh, Brazil, Canada, China, France, Germany, Israel, Italy, Republic of Korea, New Zealand, Poland, Spain and United Kingdom & Northern Ireland to enable co-creation of content and collaboration between talent. Each agreement identifies the Competent Authority for the country concerned to whom applications are made for approval as co-production. In India, the Competent Authority is the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting, Government of India.

The agreements identify who the co-producers can be, the minimum and maximum permissible share of each co-producer, possibility of co-producers from third countries, provisions for sharing of revenue, copyrights and prizes. They also provide for contribution by the co-producer of each country and incurrence of production and post-production expenses, shooting, artiste fees etc. in each country. The financial contribution (including payments in kind) from each country's co-producer(s) shall be at least 20% and shall not be more than 80% of the total production cost and a minimum of 10% from a third-country producer.

One of the key benefits of producing officially under the framework of the treaty is that the co-production is treated exactly like a national film and is thus fully entitled to all the benefits and privileges, which are or may be accorded to national films, by each of the Parties under their respective national laws.

The majority co-producer shall normally enter co-produced films in international festivals as a co-production. Audiovisual works produced on the basis of equal contributions shall be entered as an Audiovisual work of the country, where the Director is from. However, either of the co-producers may make the co-produced film accessible to international film festivals by notifying the other co-producer in advance.

Prizes, grants, incentives and other distinctions granted for the co-production shall be divided between the co-producers in accordance with the terms of the co-production contract and the laws in force in both States.

Unless the administrative authorities agree otherwise, all work on the film, including studio and post production work, shall be carried out in India or the foreign country that has signed the treaty with India or in the country of the third-party co-producer. The same must be set out in the co-production agreement.

Every producer including the third country producer shall ensure existence of a distribution or broadcasting commitment in each other's territory unless an alternative channel is allowed by administrative authorities. This assures distribution of the film in the home and international market.

Any dispute arising under this Treaty shall be settled consensually through consultation and negotiation between the countries.
